

Governors endorse Day of Action

BUSES LEAVE TUESDAY AT 10a.m.

Rector Patrick Kenniff, the vice-rectors, the deans, and the presidents of most campus organizations and unions (CUFA, CUSA, CUNASA, GSA, ECA, etc. . .) will be boarding buses Tuesday morning between 9:30 a.m. and 10:00 a.m. to take Concordia's case for underfunding to the centre of government decision-making — the National Assembly in Québec City.

Responding to criticism about the lack of crystal clear directives, Kenniff left not doubt yesterday that everyone who can should be in Québec City on Tuesday.

That means no classes, no labs, no libraries, no regular office work, no guest lectures and no scheduled activities of any kind. "It's not a day off," Kenniff said. "All faculty, students and staff should come to campus as usual, but regular activities should be replaced by some form of participation in the Day of Action" (see page 4 for details).

Official notices from Kenniff and the vice-rectors were mailed out yesterday to all full- and part-time faculty and staff clearly spelling out what is expected of everyone next Tuesday. The notices are reprinted on page 5.

Travelling seminars

Marriott Corporation, the good folks who run the food services at Concordia, will be selling box lunches (at reduced rates as their contribution to the Day of Action) for the trip to Québec. The lunches, as well as hot coffee, will be available as passengers board buses — both downtown at the Hall Building and in front of the Administration Building at the west-end campus.

"Just how many people will join Kenniff and the other campus leaders for the trip to Québec is still anyone's guess," organizers say. "Several hundred people have signed up already, but if the government is going to take us seriously we'll need at least 1,000

Governors request meeting with Bourassa

The Board of Governors has fully endorsed all of the activities planned for Tuesday's "Day of Action" — including the protest March on the National Assembly.

At an emergency meeting yesterday morning at 8:00, the governors passed a unanimous motion supporting the position taken by the rest of the Concordia community and urging as many people as possible to participate.

They also made clear that no one — faculty, staff or students — will be penalized in any way for participating in the Day of Action.

Moving beyond a simple vote of support, the governors also appointed a six-member delegation to request a meeting with Québec Premier Robert Bourassa "at the earliest possible occasion" to express their dissatisfaction with the government's funding formula for Concordia and the lack of response to date from Higher Education and Science Minister Claude Ryan.

Some of the outside members of the board (representing the community-at-large) will also be taking out full-page advertisements next week, at their own expense, in major English and French language newspapers. The ads will voice support for Concordia's case and urge the government to reconsider its present funding policy.

It has now been four weeks since Ryan came to Concordia to listen to the board's concerns about his latest funding formula to distribute annual operating grants to all Québec universities.

Rector Patrick Kenniff sent a telegram to the Minister last Thursday asking whether he was any closer to making a decision. Ryan's reply, See GOVERNORS page 3

Whyte accompanies Mayor Doré to China

Concordia scores another coup

by Ken Whittingham

Vice-Rector (Academic) Francis Whyte left for China on Tuesday as part of an 11-member delegation headed by Montréal Mayor Jean Doré.

The delegation will spend 10 days in Shanghai, Beijing and Hong Kong.

It will be joined in Shanghai by a high-level contingent of Canadian business people that includes the presidents or vice-presidents of Canadian Marconi Inc., Bombardier Inc., BCP-China Ltée, and ALIS Technologies Inc.

Whyte and the Director of International Cooperation at Ecole polytechnique, Rémi Tougas, are the only two university representatives among the group.

The Doré trip to the People's Republic is a follow-through to the twinning three years ago of the cities of Montréal and Shanghai.

Doré will use the occasion to sign a protocol involving academic, cultural, medical and technical co-operation. Exchanges in the latter category involve such diverse areas of interest as public works, auditing techniques, trade, agriculture and economic cooperation.

The delegation includes the Assistant Deputy Ministers of ings, particularly with The People's Republic," says Martin Singer, Director of Concordia's Council for International Cooperation.

Last March Concordia became the first university in Chinese institutions, including two in Shanghai — Jiaotong University and the Shanghai International Studies University (SISU).

Embassy officials

Doré will be making a major address at the SISU campus, and he will use the opportunity to encourage other universities to follow Concordia's lead in developing expanded ties with their Chinese counterparts.

Later, in Beijing, Whyte will meet with Canadian Embassy officials and Chinese higher education authorities to discuss details of Concordia's activities in the PRC.

Less than a week after Whyte returns, a five-member Concordia delegation will leave for China to assess the state of the eight ententes now in place, and decide what measures, if any, are needed to improve or expand them. In addition to Singer the group will be composed of Bruce Barkman, Philippe Callier, Dennis Dicks and Robert Roy.

Additional information about that and other international initiatives at Concordia will be contained in upcoming issues of The Thursday Report.

Part 1 of a 3-part series about women at Concordia

A catalyst for change

Status of Women works at eliminating discrimination against women employees

Concordia has a solid record of action taken in support of women's issues and Women's Studies.

As the first University in Québec to pass an employment equity policy, Concordia is now hiring an officer to implement this new policy. The University is also the first in Québec to sign with its faculty association a bilingual collective agreement that does not use sexist language.

Furthermore, among the province's universities, only Concordia and Laval have a senior staff position that addresses the needs of women. At Concordia, the Office on the Status of Women has been in place for two years and will continue for at least five more.

On the academic side, Women's Studies were pioneered at Concordia in 1978 when the Simone de Beauvoir Institute was founded to focus on the past and present situation of women in society.

This three-part series will look at recent changes to the administrative and academic services available to women at Concordia — whether they involve faculty, staff, or students — and at what's in store for the future.

by Barbara Verity

For the past two years, the Office on the Status of Women has been a catalyst for change at Concordia. Evolving from the 1982 Report on the Status of Women at Concordia, the office has had an active two years and looks ahead to even more change over the next five years of its mandate.

Consisting of Elizabeth Morey as Advisor to the Rector on the Status of Women, a small support staff and a broadly-based committee, the office recently published a report which covers the past two years and looks ahead.

It (the Report) looks into every aspect of University life. Whether you are a faculty member, employee or student, the Office on the Status of Women is having an impact. And more change is likely to come.

Policy set

Consider: Now that the University has adopted an employment equity policy, a standard has been set to eliminate discrimination against women employees — both staff and faculty. This covers hiring, promotion, transfers, salary, benefits, training, professional development and working conditions. Special emphasis is placed on the needs of visible minority women.

The policy also aims at having a greater balance in the numbers of men and women employees in various departments at the University. For instance, in a department that has fewer women than men employees, a woman candidate should be hired if her qualifications are equal to candidates who are men. This approach would also work in favour of a male candidate if the department has more women than men, Morey explains.

Women are given practical advice on vocational goals

The employment equity policy also aims at increasing the chances for women of being hired or promoted by seeing that well-qualified women are encouraged to apply and by seeing that employees have opportunities for professional development through training.

Fitting in with this new policy is attention paid to professional development. Three weekends of workshops were held at the University last year to give women practical advice on vocational goals. A luncheon series on Women in Management is now underway, being sponsored by the Human Resources Department, the Office on the Status of Women and the Women's Y.

Funds have been received from the Education Ministry to hire an employment equity officer who will implement the new policy with the assistance of the Office on the Status of Women as well as carry out a program to educate the University on employment equity.

Hiring is now underway, and the officer will likely be at work by the end of this month, Morey says.

Procedures in place

Plans include an analysis of procedures throughout the University so that changes can be made where discrimination exists. University documents will be studied so that sexist language can be eliminated.

In other programs, a Bibliography of Resource Materials for Professional Women is now available in the Norris Library, providing information on upgrading skills and changing careers.

Changes can be made where discrimination exists

A hiring manual is being developed by the Office on the Status of Women for use as a resource by hiring committees to ensure bias-free hiring.

A resource booklet on the expertise of women faculty and staff is also being prepared for general use, such as to provide ideas for speakers and an opportunity for networking.

While the University is working towards greater equity on the job, attention is also being paid to University services which affect all women at Concordia. The series continues next week, taking a look at changes to these services.

Library workers stage protest

Last Friday more than 30 members of the National Union of Sir George Williams University Employees (NUSGWUE), who represent 120 library support staff workers at the downtown campus, staged a protest march in the courtyard outside the Bishop Court building.

NUSGWUE President Alex Olynyk said the demonstration was designed to show support for the NUSGWUE representative who was inside the building negotiating with management representatives.

The library workers have been without a contract since November 1986 and they feel the process is moving too slowly, said Olynyk.

"We even understand and support in principle the administration's anger and preoccupation with the current provincial underfunding issue, however, we feel they should be just as concerned with getting their internal house in order."

Library Director Al Mate agrees. "We're mutually stuck on a number of issues and we've applied for conciliation to move us along.

"I think it will bring us closer to an agreement... we want it all settled, too."

to 2,000 people."

Many departments, such as Registrar's Services, have gotten together and will travel as a group in a single bus.

Some faculty members are killing two birds with one stone by arranging with their students to go together as a group and hold their class in a bus on the way up to Québec. Conditions obviously won't be ideal, but it means their classes that day will not be a total loss.

Free transportation

Campus organizations are paying the cost of the buses. The ride is free, but donations will be accepted gladly from anyone who can spare a few dollars.

The comfortable inter-city buses (no cramped shuttle conditions here) will return to their starting points (downtown and at Loyola) between 6:00 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. at the latest, and possibly a bit earlier. All buses have washroom facilities onboard.

Special arrangements have also been made to allow any member of the Concordia family, no matter what their classification, to park on the west-end campus and pick up their cars after they return from Québec. The only requirement is a student, faculty or staff I.D. card.

Tickets for the buses are available, downtown, at the Information Desk in the lobby of the Hall Building, and on the west-end campus at the Dean of Students Office (AD-121), the Faculty Personnel Office (AD-206), and the residences.

Arrangements have also been made to have hot coffee and snacks available outside the National Assembly — courtesy of travelling canteens in the provincial capital.

The Concordia contingent will seek a meeting with Higher Education and Science Minister Claude Ryan.

All three politicians will be presented with copies of the 10,000 or more protest letters that have been collected to date demanding equitable treatment from the Québec government in the distribution of operating grants for Québec universities.

continued from page one received Wednesday, indicated that he has still not grasped Concordia's central point — that the inequalities in funding that Concordia has endured for the past 13 years must end.

In Memorium A. Ross Seaman

Concordia University, the YMCA and Dawson College lost a community leader, educational innovator and consummate teacher with the passing of A. Ross Seaman on October 23, 1987.

At the time of his death he was in his third year at Concordia University as full time faculty in Leisure Studies, where he had served as Acting Chair in 1986-87. He came to Concordia after retiring from Dawson College, where he had developed the very successful program in Community Recreation Leadership Training.

While at Concordia, Ross and his wife Margaret played central roles in the development of ElderHostel on the Loyola campus. They were host and hostess of the program during the last three summers.

Ross' history at Concordia goes back to the 1940s, when as an undergraduate he attended as a YMCA Fellowship Secretary.

From its inception as a Department in 1963, Ross was a part-time faculty member in Applied Social Science and made a particular contribution to the course "Adolescent Behavior in Urban Areas."

OPINION

To the Editor:

We should remember that Concordia is part of Québec: our fate cannot be divorced from that of the province. René Lévesque died last Sunday night.

Jack Kornblatt
Biology

(Ed.'s note: Dr. Kornblatt raises an interesting point. TTR, however, has traditionally used its limited resources to cover only those stories pertaining directly to the Concordia community. That is not to say it does not recognize the importance of events on the larger municipal, provincial and even national scenes, but it leaves coverage of those significant events (and Mr. Lévesque's death was certainly significant) to the daily print and electronic media. It assumes that Concordia people use outside sources to keep them up to date on current affairs.)

To the Editor:

In the November 5th edition of TTR we are assured that the "Stock market drop leaves Concordia Pension Plan untouched."

Please give us the facts and we will judge for ourselves if we are untouched.

The sad truth which I pointed out in a letter last year is that the pension funds are being gambled on the stock market and neither the University or Québec will have the money to bail us out.

What You Can Do Next Tuesday

1. 9:15 a.m. to 10:00 a.m.

Join pep rallies (outside the Administration Building at Loyola and the Hall Building downtown) as the buses load for the three-hour trip to Québec City. The bigger the crowd, the more likely the chance of obtaining news coverage.

2. 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.

Come alone or organize a group of friends or colleagues and ride the buses to the National Assembly in Québec City. No shuttle service here. Comfortable, inter-city coaches are being used, with washroom facilities on every bus.

The bus ride is free, but donations will be accepted gladly.

Don't forget to bring along a box lunch.

3. 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

If you cannot go to Québec, spend an hour or two manning phones (in the Administration Building, Room AD-121, and the Hall Building mezzanine), or round up other volunteers to do likewise. We'll have prepared scripts to read if you are unsure of the exact message you want to deliver to your elected representatives and Education Ministry officials. Please spare a few moments to make at least one call!

4. 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. (cont'd)

After you're done with the phones, how about joining a group of 30 or 40 faculty, staff and students that will spend a few minutes picketing outside Claude Ryan's Montréal office, Liberal Party headquarters, and Premier Robert Bourassa's Hydro-Québec office? Picket signs (in both languages) will be provided. We'll even have a shuttle bus at our disposal to get you there.

It's been suggested that other groups of these "flying squads" should drop in unannounced at Montréal's favorite English-language daily, The GAZETTE, as well as local radio and television stations (complete with placards and banners) to help publicize Concordia's case for better funding. Written material will be available for you to hand out, both to the media and to passers-by on the street.

TO: Full and Part-time Faculty Members

FROM: Dr. Patrick Kenniff
Rector & Vice-Chancellor

Following a special November 12, 1987 meeting of Concordia University's Board of Governors, I should like to report to you that the Board has endorsed the November 17th "Day of Action". Furthermore, it has urged the University community to present Concordia's case to the public and the government in a manner compatible with securing the widest and strongest level of support.

There are a number of components to the "Day of Action", the positive effects of which are dependent upon the fullest participation of faculty, students and staff. To that end, the University has determined that all classes and laboratories scheduled for the 17th of November are not to be held on that day. The nature, extent and timing of any required make-up or rescheduling is of course left to the discretion of individual faculty members.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

I urge all faculty and librarians to make the 17th a day of intense active engagement with the larger community in Montreal and Quebec - to work hard with imagination and intelligence at alternative sites.

Accordingly, I join the Rector, Vice-Rectors, the representatives of the associations of students, non-academic staff, technical services, physical plant, etc., in urging you to cancel your classes, labs, college and centre activities and such committee meetings, departmental assemblies as would normally have taken place on Tuesday, November 17.

What I urge is not closure but openness; not cessation of involvement with the community but energetic alternative forms of engagement. M. Ryan's proposal for funding threatens the excellence of our community life. The tens of thousands of students, professors, librarians, administrators and staff of Concordia must express our discontent forcefully and visibly.

An engaging of the minds

Lonerган University College provides individuals with intellectual development

It is nearly 10 years old, merely the twinkling of an eye when you think of this thing called "philosophy," however it may be connoted by a single reader. To some people, it concerns how they play the horses on Thursdays at Blue Bonnets; to others it means the study of Aristotle or Plato or a bottle of wine. At Concordia it has a special meaning, unusual considering the times, a meaning which harkens back to what 'philosophy' really is, an uncertain look at the meaning of life. In this second article in a series on Concordia's six colleges, TTR looks at our unique and important philosophical questioners.

by Ross Rogers

A bulletin hanging outside the door at Lonerган University College reads: "Thursdays at Lonerган. Come and exercise your mind." It's a telling sign because for Concordia students enrolled here, an in-depth intellectual discussion is a healthy way to start any day.

"This college just doesn't talk about education, it embodies it. You are what you study," says college principal Charles Davis, and certainly his words sum up Lonerган's unique formula.

Drawing inspiration from the late Bernard Lonerган, S.J., a former Loyola professor and modern philosopher, Lonerган University College was formed in 1979 with the conviction that the most enriching environment for students was outside the confines of their academic specialties. Each year, under the direction of a Visiting Scholar with an international reputation, students at Lonerган take part in seminars discussing one of the world's major thinkers — or in Lonerганese, a "seminal thinker." In the past, they have pursued works by Carl Jung, Northrop Frye, Machiavelli, Teresa of Avila, Charles Darwin, Sigmund Freud and Dante Alighieri.

"... We try to give students a special insight..."

"Lonerган believes in interdisciplinary study. Giving a student the opportunity to interact with people with different viewpoints is a necessary process in personal and intellectual development," says Davis. And to make that kind of academic community work, he says, naturally the approach must be fresh and engaging.

To heighten the "interdisciplinary" aspect of the curriculum, College Fellows from various Concordia faculties are invited to lead alternating seminars. And if students are baffled as to why the curriculum deliberately focuses on the major works of only one "seminal thinker," Davis's explanation is again an integral part of the Lonerган method. "This gives students a very in-depth perspective, a chance to grapple with the writings of a master... at one time."

This year's chosen master is R. Buckminster Fuller, a world-renowned and recently-deceased architect who is celebrated for his work on the "Dymaxion Principle." To Montrealers, he is familiar as the man who designed the famous geodesic dome for Expo 67, which remained as of truth," begins a short posted synopsis of Eastham's seminar on Fuller.

And unlike what some Concordia students might think, says principal Davis, Lonerган lures people from all walks of life. "Lonerган, of course, was formed by a well-known Jesuit thinker. Today, though, Lonerган is not just an enclave of Catholics. We pride ourselves on our pluralist approach to study." Students are also often misguided in thinking that Lonerган is a purely Christian college. "In the beginning here, there was a myself a chance at a university education with a difference."

The need to "reach out further in intellectual development" is something that students like Amy Parent demand of a university, says Charles Davis. And undoubtedly, "individual" is a key word at Lonerган. Will a small enrollment of 31 undergraduates and four graduate students, you can expect personal attention. "When Loyola merged with Concordia, we were left with a problem — a large and sometimes alien community. We look at Lonerган as a kind of with renowned scholars.

Earlier this month a discussion with McGill professor John Hellman on "Vichy, Fascism and French Catholics" attracted a small group of men and women eager to hear Hellman's views on this controversial régime. The discussion that evolved was as engaging as the subject matter, ranging from the opinions of several students to the perspective of one man who lived through WWII.

"Nowhere in the University could you get a chance to hear and discuss such diverse views," says Davis. Some intriguing discussion groups coming up include: "Is Nuclear Energy Safe," led by Genevieve Patterson from the Université du Québec à Montréal, and "Education for Human Rights," with Christian Bay, Department of Political Science, University of Toronto.

Students needn't be nervous about Lonerган's curriculum being too lofty, says Davis. "We do make demands here with reading and intellectual development. But we also want to relate it to everyday knowledge. We try and give students a special insight."

"We're going strong," says the principal, "and our hope is that we're only going to get stronger."

"We're going strong and going to get stronger"

one of the highpoints of Man and His World.

Surprisingly, however, his architectural accomplishments are not the core subject of discussion. More attention is given to his philosophical notions of fear, greed and ignorance, says Davis. "When I said that our seminars cross all disciplines, you can now see why." Led by distinguished scholar Scott Eastham, students will read and discuss Fuller's works on subjects as diverse as "The Dharma of Domes" and "Spaceship Earth," (from his book by that name).

"To learn is to be engaged with other minds in the pursuit tendency to express our views in religious terms. A person's convictions were called 'religion.' Today, we don't impose a religious vocabulary."

Amy Parent, a first-year Lonerган student, says she certainly didn't arrive at the school with religious convictions. "I don't consider myself religious in any way," she says. "I have a Catholic background, but I was really attracted to the idea that I could study a genius like Buckminster Fuller." Moreover, she feels her university education is inseparable from her personal development. "I don't consider myself an intellect from a snobby point of view. I just wanted to give special-interest unit."

That special-interest unit is also blessed with facilities with a pleasant ambience, says Davis. A visitor at the college, located at 7302 Sherbrooke St. West, will find the house's oak trim and large windows have a natural warmth. Students have access to a personal computer for writing papers, and large, airy rooms.

An extracurricular activity which Davis himself instigated is a weekly seminar group called "Thursdays at Lonerган." Each Thursday between 4:00 and 5:30 p.m. students at the college — as well as outsiders — are invited to discuss a myriad of subjects

Details on membership requirements for Lonerган can be found in the University Calendar and in pamphlets published by the college. To be eligible, students must be completing a departmental major, specialization or honours degree program.

While at Lonerган, students finish a total of 18 credits of Lonerган College Seminars and a total of 16 from an Approved Electives list. Or for students who have completed 30 credits at Concordia prior to joining Lonerган, 12 credits of Lonerган College Seminars and 12 credits from an Approved Electives list.
